Problem of Elderly people who live alone is very important and actual nowadays. We know a lot of situations when an old person lives alone and forlorn. He is forgotten by his children and needs help. He also needs someone, who can help him in emergent situation.

I guess, that in such cases, Social Services must help old people, or the law should make their children help them. The reason is very simple and should be clear to everyone - we must respect elderly people and take care of them. We can help them, cause some time ago they helped our country in this or that way. Helping elderly people isn't hard at all, but it's very important for them and for all young and old people in the world all-in-all.

As for me, I think that the monitoring system which we can read about in the article is quite a good idea. It will be possible to help Elderly people in emergent cases and when they need first aid. But listening-in the old person isn't good, so, system should be fully automatical and also it shouldn't store recordings to safe personal information.

So, I guess that solving a problem of elderly people by new information technologies is a brilliant idea, which would protect old people in the future and it would be safe and easy.
